INCLUSIVE PORTLAND:
URBAN RESEARCH OPPORTUNITY SPRING TERM
2-4 credits, meeting time to be determined.
Will partially satisfy requirement for advanced study cluster in urban architecture, urban design, or urban sustainability.

Howard Davis is looking for a few graduate students to continue research on the architecture and urbanism of small, artisan businesses in Portland. The work will be for academic credit, and could contribute to a required advanced study cluster for M.Arch. students in an urban focus.

The research will continue work conducted during winter term: 1) the detailed mapping of the neighborhood centered on North Williams Avenue, and 2) detailed studies of the architecture of small-scale craft and industry. The work is premised on the idea of inclusive urbanism: ways in which architecture and urban design may support the participation of people who are at all rungs of the economic ladder in finding their way in urban life and the urban economy. The work is leading to publication and conference presentations--the most immediate will be a conference on urban form this summer in Australia.

The research will be directed by Howard Davis working in collaboration with Matt Brown, who has recently returned from five years in practice in London and who has worked with Howard on related projects in London and Guangzhou, China.
