Time in Built Space

Evoking the Past, Present and Future Through Built Form

Recollecting the past, sensing the present, and anticipating the future are essential parts of human being. This course examines how these key modes of being can be more actively supported by built environments.

In addition to analyzing how existing buildings evoke the past, present and future, members of the class will also have the opportunity to explore these ideas in a personal design project.

Arch 407/507 Spring 2014
2/3 Credits: Thursday, 4-6 pm.
Kevin Nutke knute@uoregon.edu

Photo: Mitsumasa Fujitsuka