The Bauhaus was a significant player in the development of modernism in architecture, art, graphic design and product design during the 20th century. It was based for 9 years in Dessau, Germany, where Walter Gropius designed its main building. The curriculum integrated art, craft and architecture.

The project for this studio will be the design of a building to house the Bauhaus Museum Dessau, which includes archives, exhibition, auditorium, workshops and offices. The site is in the center of Dessau Germany in a park. The program is based on an international design competition.

In addition to the museum building, the design will include a parking structure and redesigning the park.

Emphasis in the studio will be placed on the integration of the building with its context, both buildings, landscape, and climate; appropriate use of lighting to reinforce the tasks of the program; clarity in the organization and spatial hierarchy; and the craft of building.
